Northern Kentucky's Dixie Highway (Images Of America)

Synopsis

Northern Kentucky's Dixie Highway is a slice of Americana pie. Known also as U.S. 25 and the Lexington-Covington Turnpike, the once-rural route connects the urban cores of Cincinnati, Covington, and Newport to Central Kentucky. Originally a buffalo trail and named in the early 1800s, the route became a paved national highway in the 1920s. The creation of the thoroughfare encouraged the growth of several communities along its route that still thrive today. Images of America: Northern Kentucky's Dixie Highway captures historic images of the people and places along the Dixie Highway beginning in Covington and heading south through Boone County. The photographs—some taken as early as the mid-1800s—depict time's influence as well as those things that remain the same. The 200 images inside offer readers a chance to revisit the friends, familiar sites, and memorable times enjoyed along Northern Kentucky's Dixie Highway.

Title: Club looks back at history
Author: Staff Writer
Publisher: The Enquirer
Date: 9/21/09
Deborah Kohl Kremer treated the Florence Rotary Club to a Northern Kentucky history lesson via a presentation and photos from her newly published book, "Northern Kentucky's Dixie Highway." The book is a pictorial history of the highway from when it was a dirt toll road up until recent times. The book, with 200 photos dating back to the late 1800s, is not just about a roadway, but the story of the towns, people, and places along the way from Covington to Florence. Kremer presented several of the photos from the book along with related stories about each. Her favorite photo, which belonged to her grandfather, serves as the cover of the book. Taken in 1893, it shows a 20-horse team pulling a monument up a hill from Covington to a cemetery in Fort Mitchell. Some of the photos are of buildings long gone but with extremely interesting histories, like the Cabana Bar and Restaurant with its bowling alley and alleged secret back room or the Roundup Club in Erlanger that featured a Western theme and was home to a live caged bear that made appearances in the parking lot back in the 1970s. Other photos are of buildings still standing, but with new names and new uses today. One is of the Dixie Tea Room, now the Greyhound Tavern, and another of the Retschulte Five Mile House, now known as Barleycorn's. A family photo tells the story of Joseph Kuchle, a German immigrant who changed his business as the times changed. Kuchle built wagons, was a blacksmith, sold gasoline, and eventually sold and serviced cars on the corner of Kyles Lane and Dixie. The book can be purchased at local Northern Kentucky bookstores. By the look of her new book, she amassed a fortune. Kremer is the author of "Northern Kentucky's Dixie Highway," part of the "Images of America" series by Arcadia Publishing. It will hit stores June 8. This is the first book for Kremer, a freelance writer and contributor to The Kentucky Enquirer. The book features 200 black-and-white photos of the roughly 15-mile stretch of the highway from Covington to Florence, with some dating to the 1800s. Kremer, who was raised in Villa Hills and has traveled the highway frequently, called everybody she knew who had any connection with the road. "I was in living rooms, basements, garages," Kremer said. "I looked through thousands of pictures." She scanned the photos on site and wrote the captions for them after interviewing the owners of the photos."Everyone told me so many neat stories," Kremer said. The chapters of the book follow the road from Covington to Florence, with many of the photos requiring some imagination. For example, a 1904 photo shows a snow-covered stretch of the highway in Fort Mitchell with nothing but farmland on both sides. A few 1937 photos show the construction of the Southern Railroad underpass in Erlanger. There are also dramatic pictures of the Lookout House fire in Fort Wright 1973, and the congregation of Blessed Sacrament Church in Fort Mitchell laying the church's cornerstone in 1920. "My husband found those Blessed Sacrament photos at an antique store last year," said Ruth Korzenborn, who contributed several photos to the book with her husband, Kenton County Sheriff Chuck Korzenborn. "They were part of someone's personal family photo album - he knew how historical they were." Kremer said after she got the photos she needed, people were still calling her with many more to contribute. She said she may do a second volume on the same stretch of highway in the near future.

Author Deborah Kohl Kremer is a Northern Kentucky native who has been traveling along the Dixie Highway for several decades. A freelance writer from Villa Hills, Kremer's writing has been featured in Kentucky Monthly Magazine, the Cincinnati Enquirer, and other regional and national publications.

I really appreciate Images of America's series of books and the opportunity for people to create local history pictorials. Having lived in the northern KY area by Dixie Highway for most of my life, I was looking forward to viewing this book to catch glimpses of days gone by. I did, but there's so much that wasn't covered I felt unsatisfied. I can understand the difficulties in obtaining photographs but it seemed the author, Ms. Kremer, was concerned more with certain aspects and/or simply concentrated on what material she had available and then went with that.

Northern Kentucky is my home and I love to read about its history. This book is well written, informative, and balanced by great photographs and visuals. Everyone living in Northern Kentucky, and those interested in its rich history, should have a copy. The book took me on a journey back in time to a part of Kentucky's past that I knew so little about. Highly recommended.

I Read through the book in the car on vacation and couldn't put it down. So many memories of things in my lifetime and before. It was neat to see how Dixie Highway was a dirt road in the beginning and how it has changed over the years. You must buy this book if you have any connection with Northern Kentucky as you will be sure to see things you remember that are long gone, like the White Horse, Lookout House, Dixie Gardens and even the Round-Up Club!

The book brought back many memories for my parents, but did not have enough history to tell a good story for me.
