Benedict Allen is one of the UK's most prominent explorers. For the past twenty-five years he has conducted solo expeditions through the jungle, along Namibia's Skeleton Coast and across Mongolia's Gobi Desert without the use of GPS, satellite phone or other means of outside support, as well as having written ten books of his adventures and editing The Faber Book of Exploration. He was the first explorer to bring the full experience of remote travel to television - taking the genre to its limits by not using a camera crew and so bringing an immediacy to his experiences. Allen regularly gives lectures at the Royal Geographic Society. --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

Like Allen's other books, this is an interesting account of a solo trip in the back of beyond. It puts you in the rain forest for a few hours without having to dodge venomous snakes or worry about getting sick and lost. Good adventure.
