Spencer Salend. A former teacher in the New York City School System, Spencer Salend is a professor at SUNY-New Paltz. Widely known for his work in translating research into practice, he has published and presented on such topics as inclusive educational practices, educational assessment, and students from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds. In recognition of the significance of his research and work with schools and its benefits to others, he was selected as a recipient of the State University of New York's Faculty Scholar Award and the Chancellor's Research Recognition Award. He has also served as a project director and program evaluator for numerous federal and state projects and has shared his work by engaging in a variety of professional development activities. He serves as an expert consultant helping the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) develop and implement a rigorous and comprehensive performance-based teacher evaluation system and professional learning program that addresses standards for highly effective teachers of students with disabilities in inclusive classrooms.

This book was required for one of my Master's classes. I originally rented an outdated edition, which was the one that was required. This book was in such terrible shape that I was afraid to touch it - it was dirty and mouse-gnawed on the corners of the book. But this replacement, though not the edition that was necessary for the class, worked. I loved being able to put it in a binder and use only the chapters that I needed for reference. The paper is not good quality, however.

The book itself seems to have some wonderful information, however I cannot figure out how to access the embedded videos/documents as the triangle icon is not clickable. When this glitch is fixed it will be 5 stars.

Great experience!

Item as described low price. They look amazing and cutting food smoothly. good . arrive on time. Kelly needs it ,
